

You've got T-mail.

We all love getting mail.

Real, old-school mail, you know? A package, parcel or packet wrapped up, addressed and complete with stamps and postage and all that stuff.

So what's better than getting one a month and getting a brand new mystery tee in each one? Mailboxtees.com is this really cool site that lets you subscribe to a monthly maildrop of one-off limited edition tees from a number of cool designers. Each design is only given a print of 500 tees and'll be printed with its unique number on the back and with each tee you'll get some info on the designer. And this is every month! Mailboxtees' designers are given a concept to work on for each series like "Nature vs. Humankind" or "My city" so you might know the theme but haven't a clue how your designer will have interpreted it.

We got a bunch sent to the office and not only is it sweet to get a tee that you've never seen before lucky dip style but they're also printed on really soft fine cotton. They feel like you've had them kicking about your wardrobe for years and have tallied up some good times and memories in them.

Subscriptions are available in 3, 6, 9 or 12 month blocks and range from about £40 to £130 respectively so we say you treat someone you love (or suffering from a really bad wardrobe) to a monthly tee in their mailbox. Beats the brown windowed envelope from the 'leccie company telling you you owe them cash. Oh, and they're also available for kids and, get this, they send you slightly larger sizes each month as your little beanie grows!! Is that not just nauseatingly cute?
